Objective

By the end of this video segment, viewers will be able to discuss difficulties that may arise when patient wishes seem more idealistic than realistic.

Summary

Ms. Stephenson's health care team is working to develop a discharge plan so that she may go home. Despite her strong desire to return to life outside of the hospital and to resume her normal activities, she will require many services and support systems to be successful.

Patients Highlighted

Barbara Stephenson, 67-year-old woman with end stage renal cell cancer and Myasthenia gravis.

Discussion Points

Mrs. Stephenson says, "You have to believe in something." When asked what she will do first when she gets home she quickly replies, "play golf." She is quite weak, admits that she can't walk well, and she has a number of medical devices attached to her.

Discussion Question 1

Reflect on Mrs. Stephenson's statements about playing golf and returning to preaching when she gets home. What do you think prompts her to reach so high regarding her functional abilities?

Further Discussion/Points as Needed to Prompt Audience Interaction

Do you think she is being unrealistic? Idealistic? Or is she trying to aim high to be positive and to believe in something as she has previously stated?

Discussion Question 2

If you were the nurse caring for Mrs. Stephenson, how would you respond when she states that her goal is to play golf?

Further Discussion/Points as Needed to Prompt Audience Interaction

Would you validate her goals? Would you talk to her about safety? Would you fear that you would diminish her hope if you took a more realistic approach?
